BUFFALO BILL NOVELS IN PAPER-BACK BOOK FORMAT

By J. Edward Leithead

FAR WEST, the original 15-cent Buffalo Bill library published by Street & Smith, started about 1907, ran to 211 numbers, as did the reprint BUFFALO BILL BORDER STORIES which followed. FAR WEST had 17 numbers, from #27 to 43 inclusive, with the name of Buffalo Bill left out of the titles, as shown below in list at the left. These 17 were all re-issued in BORDER STORIES and GREAT WESTERN, using Buffalo Bill's name in the titles, shown in list at the right. No. 1 of both FAR WEST and BORDER STORIES was "Buffalo Bill, the Border King," but otherwise the arrangement of titles was different in these two libraries, and a complete check against BORDER STORIES isn't possible unless one has the 17 FAR WESTS listed below to compare with the 17 BORDER STORIES, book by book. It's fair to assume that BORDER STORIES No. 7, "Buffalo Bill's Iron Grip," is FAR WEST No. 29, "In a Grip of Iron," and that BORDER STORIES No. 47, "Buffalo Bill's Traitor Guide," is FAR WEST No. 32, "The Traitor Guide." But aside from these two, it's anyone's guess how the rest of the 17 issues match up.

Far West Library

- 27 The Stranger in Camp
- 28 The Fate of the Enemy

- 34 A Hero in Buckskin
- 35 A Dead Man's Warning
- 36 The Man Without Honor
- 37 When the Coil Tightens
- 38 By Lightning's Flash
- 39 A Plea for the Enemy
- 40 Pard of the Plains
- 41 When Fate Plays Pranks
- 42 A Dash for Life.
- 43 Out of the Jaws of Death

NEWSY NEWS

by Ralph F. Cummings

E. Marvin Smith says he read in "Time" mag that Street & Smith has discontinued the Shadow, Western Story, etc. Guess this is going to be a "Woman's World" after all. He never dreamed S & S would ever stop publishing real "he man stuff." He wants to know if there will be another publisher that will take it over, or not? S & S will publish 3 womens mags hereafter. More money and a larger circulation in 'em.

Herman Brauner sends his apology for not answering a lot of letters sooner than he did, as he's been down in Florida, so he'll answer all letters hereafter.

Clarence H. Smith, 277 West Ave., Patchogue, N. Y., died Sept. 22, 1949.

Stanley A. Pachon, 627 Hayes St., Bethlehem, Pa. wants information on the first and last numbers, and dates of "Weekly Novelette," "Home Circle," "Gleason's Pictorial Line of Battleships," and "Lowell's Leather Clad Tales."

L. C. Skinner, 36 Chaplin St., Pawtucket, R. I., had a shock over a year ago, and not one member has been to see him. A fine lot of brothers we are, myself included, for I live only about 25 miles from him, and I've no excuse, so will someone pay our sick brother a visit? I'm planning on going down there in a day or two, so I'll break the ice, Pards. I ought to be ashamed of myself.

Charles F. Heartman, 421 So. Seguin Ave., New Braunfels, Texas. has 8 vols. of Gleason's Pictorial magazines for sale, all in nice condition, so be sure to write to him about them.

James W. Martin of San Francisco, Calif., visited our Bro. Frisco Bert Couch, and says what a collection, not only novels, but a nice lot of cloth books on the early western history, and other items.

Stanley Pachon says the Library of Congress at Washington, D. C., has 19,543 dime novels in their collection.

Mr. and Mrs. Lou Kohrt of 3749 Robinhood St., Houston, Texas, was here May 17th, and had quite a time finding Fisherville. (Anyone coming this way, I live in Worcester County, and Fisherville belongs to Grafton, Mass. If you come by bus, take a No. 23, Worcester Street Railway Co., bus at Worcester, and ask the driver to let you off at Pleasant St., Saundersville, a 25c ride from Worcester, and ask any one where I live. If you come by automobile, take route 122A to above address.) Lou visited Fred Lee on his way up, and after he left here, he went to see Ray Caldwell, but he wasn't home, but he did meet Carl Linville. They had a fine trip and a fine time too, such as it was. Lou has 3 complete years of the N. Y. Ledger in the early 1860's to sell for $10.00 or will trade. All in nice condition.

George S. Barton, 15 Bloomfield St., Lexington 73, Mass. is in the New England Baptist Hospital of Boston, with a very bad foot injury.

Prof. Johannsen says his two books on the House of Beadle won't be out now, before fall, as he has to put some more in, to fill up the books.

"Beagle Scented Murder," by Frank Gruber was published in 3 novels in one book, the others are "The Sleeping Sphinx" and "Death of a Doll," but "Beagle Scented Murder" is really the name of "Market for Murder," that mentions the various old novels in it, and Charles Bragin, etc. It was published by the Detective Book Club, Walter J. Black, New York, N. Y. Price $1.98 in 1947. Clyde Wakefield sent in the information.

Railroad Avenue, Great Stories and Legends of American Railroadings, by Freeman H. Hubbard. 1945. Published by Whittlesey House, McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc. New York and London, has a lot of fine stuff in it, also picture and reading on the James Boys and their families and others. Very interesting and worthy of anyones collection.

OLIVER OPTIC

Centenary of His Birth Recalls This Purveyor of Boys' Stories

Remember the time when an Oliver Optic book kept you out of bed at nights or when you awoke early in the morning eager for an added opportunity to follow the adventures of "Young America Abroad" or to read more of the martial deeds of the gallant heroes of the Blue and Grey series? You shared the delight of reading the works of one of the most popular writers of boys' books America has ever known.

Oliver Optic's centenary fell on Sunday, and although his works are now left largely on the shelf, preference being given to the stories of later writers which register the introduction of modern mechanisms and scientific discoveries in the field of adventure, the boy readers of the past are not likely to forget his name. More than a hundred books were written by him and about eight hundred stories, while for years "Our Boys and Girls," the weekly magazine for juvenile readers, founded by him in 1867, contained articles and stories from his pen.

His aim, he once said, was to furnish interesting and exciting tales that would hold the attention of the young people and yet never entrap them into sympathy with evil doers or to encourage in them admiration for bold or lawless acts. "I have never made a hero," he said, "whose moral character or whose lack of high aims could mislead the young reader." So, although stylists frowned upon him, his works never required the activities of a literary or moral censor and he gave a thrill without an offense.

His nom de plume was far better known than his real name, William Taylor Adams, although the Adams House, on Washington street, in Boston, attests the fact that he and his father, Laban Adams, the former owner of the Lamb Tavern that occupied that site at an earlier date, had been concerned in founding that hostelry, his father also running the Village Hotel at Medway, where "Oliver Optic" was born in 1822. Becoming a school teacher at eighteen, he devoted the first twenty-five years of his active life to teaching, followed it with ten years service on the Boston school board and, for a term, represented the Dorchester district in the General Assembly of Massachusetts.

But literature gradually claimed his attention. Under nom de plumes such as Irving Brown, Clingham Hunter, M.D., the Old Stager, A Retired Attorney and Man of the World, he produced many short stories and novellettes of romance and adventure, a trip to the South, made shortly after the Mexican War, furnishing the inspiration for his first book, "Hatchie, the Guardian Slave," which had New Orleans as its setting, and which, published over the name of Warren T. Ashton, was sold for $37.50. His knowledge of boys, gained in the schoolroom and on the athletic field, turned his attention to the production of literature for boys. There, he became a pioneer in the production of lively, wholesome stories of adventure, the name Optic being adopted after seeing a play in which a character of that name appeared and Oliver added simply because of its alliterative attraction.

Oliver Optic soon became almost a household word and his magazine, "Our Boys and Girls," was known equally well as "Oliver Optic's." Julia Ward Howe, Louise Chandler Moulton, Jane G. Austin, "Sophie May," Amanda M. Douglass, Fitz Hugh Ludlow, John Hay, then Secretary of the Legation at Paris, George M. Boker, of this city, and other writers of merit joined in contributions to the Optic weekly, whose feature was a chapter of fiction by its editor and an informative editorial of educational or moral value.

Few of his boy readers knew that when he wrote of foreign lands he spoke from first-hand observation, for a dozen trips abroad were made in search of material, and, after he had passed the age of seventy he set out on a world journey for fresh material for his "All-Over-The-World Series." When he died, in 1897, at the old house on Dorchester Heights, where he had resided for nearly a half-century, he was respected as one of Boston's best-known writers, even though his early efforts to interest the boys of that city with breezy combinations of fact and fiction had been looked upon as ephemeral literature of a poor sort.

Mary Ann Evans wrote under the pen name of George Elliot, some of her works were Adam Bede, Silas Marner and others.
